We can infer that Mrs. Jones tells this to Roger because she wants to educate him and teach him a lesson. She tells him that she also did bad things so he will listen to her and relate to her and will not try to steal again.

The Treasure of Lemon Brown

16. The quote tells us money and power are not as important as love and kindness. The quote is connected to the short story The Treasure of Lemon Brown. Lemon Brown teaches Greg that everyone has a treasure. The thugs think the treasurer is money but Lemon Brown shows Greg that it is his harmonica and newspaper clippings that prove he was successful. His son died in a war holding these things. Brown shows Greg that a real treasure is not really money but what you make of yourself and his son understood this. At the end of the story Greg understand the message and goes back home.

The quote and the short story have the same message.

Or

The Road Not Taken

17. The quote explains that throughout life we make choices that define who we are. In the poem the Road Not Taken, the traveler has to decide between two roads. He understands that this decisions will change his life and that he cannot go back and change it. ("way leads to way"). In the last stanza the traveler sighs because he understands that he has chosen the path less traveled by and his choice "has made all the difference." The quote is reflected clearly in the poem.
