part one:

A. rules of the game:

1. It helped her win chess games \ it helped her deal with her mother\ get what she wanted from her mother

2. 2 she wanted them to have better lives

3. Waverly became a very successful chess player, both locally and nationally. it was a way for her to express her talent and intelligence. she is no longer dependent on her mothers approval she competed against older and more experienced players and won. She didn't appreciate the fact that her mother watched over her as she practiced at home, nor did she accept her mother's advice not to lose so many pawns despite the fact it is meaning less for the final outcome. Their relationship became more tense and stressed till the final conflict in the market where her mother went with Meimei in order to boast about her daughters achievements. Meimei was embarrassed and confronted her mother about showing off. She became more confident and didn't hesitate to confront her mother due to her growing success in chess.

4. Thinking skill I chose: Inferring

The story "Rules of the game" end with Waverly alone in her room, pondering her next move. I assume that Waverly , at this point, feels alienated and distant from her mother. I read between the lines that Waverly is torn between her being an American girl with Western values versus her mother's beliefs, attitude and values which are Chinese and contradict Waverly's.

part two:

c. All my sons:

9. 2 give Steve a job

10. 4 he didn't want to lose army contract

11. Larry, the Kellers missing son, influences the other characters greatly. Kate the worrying mother is completely haunted by his absence. she interprets everything that happens as if Larry is still alive. Omen the apple tree which was planted in Larry's memory and broke down during the storm. She became superstitious asking Frank to make a horoscope, in order to find out whether Larry went missing on his favorable day. Finally disapproving of Chris and Ann's relationship because she still considers her as Larry's girl. in her view, Larry is coming back therefore their union is unacceptable. Kate refuses to believe Larry is dead since it may force her to admit her husband's guilt.

12. Before Chris left at the end of act 2, it was obvious that as an idealist, he expected his father to turn himself in. However, when he returned in act 3, this was a turning point for him since he now had a more realistic, practical point of view. He no longer sought his parents' approval for his relationship with Ann, he decided to quit the plant, move out and start a new life with Ann far away from home having his past behind.

13. Comparing and contrasting

On the one hand, the Baylis, Jim and Sue achieve the American dream. Jim works as a doctor, despite the fact that he wants to do research. his wife has a more materialistic approach, and she pushes her husband to make more money, even at the expense of fulfilling his dreams. Jim seems to be a dissatisfied man in his family life. on the other hand, Frank and Lydia are less sophisticated than the previous couple, but they seem to be happier. They have 3 children they own a house, and they have achieved all that before the age of 30. Frank is a spirited man while Jim and Sue are more cynical. Frank and Lydia started a family instead of joining the war.

part 3:

19. As I grew older:

Hughes was a proud man. He emphasized the beauty and pride of being an African American.

In the poem "As I grew older" it is clear that the speaker encounters many obstacles, in the form of a wall which rises high and separates him from his goals and dreams. The wall is no other than the racism, prejudice and stereotype of the white society towards the African American. It is only later on, as the speaker matures and becomes active, possess a more optimistic point of view and begins to struggle, shatter the wall, and fight to realize his dream. As in the information above which states that black is beautiful, the speaker looks at his black hands and he is proud now of his black hands and heritage.
